Tells How the Mercur Consolia dation Was Effected.

Captain Joseph De Lamar, who man to make the mining industry of Utah what it is, arrived yesterday afternoon from Paris accompanied by his little daughter and attendants, and is quartered at the Knutsford hotel. It is nearly a year since the captain made his last visit to Utah, and he comes back in the best of health and is prepared to make quite a protracted stay, during which time he will make a personal examination of all his westa personal examination of all his western mines and thus acquaint himself more in detail regarding the workings of his bonanzas than he has been accustomed to doing in late years.

The captain will be on hand to participate in the closing scenes of the consolidation of the two great Mercur mines, the Golden Gate and the Mercur, which is scheduled to take place on the 21st inst. The Mercur stockholders, or, at least, a majority of them, have already ratified the agreement for a consolidation of the two properties entered into by the captain and John Dern while in France, the latter acting for the Mercur company.
It was Captain De Lamar's desire that It was Captain De Lamar's desire that the Golden Gate mine be absorbed by the Mercur company, thus saving the expense of organizing a new corpora-tion, but on account of the Mercur stockholders not being unanimous in ratifying the first agreement, some ob-jecting to the plan, it was found to avoid any future trouble over any technicality in the law, the only safe plan was to organize the new corporation, then the old ones transfer the holdings of each by deed to the new.

Another reason why the captain favored an absorption by the Mercur company was for the reason that the capitalization of that company is not excessive, being 200,000 shares of a par value of $25. In that case the number of shares might have been increased to 1,000,000 shares of a par value of $5

The new company to be organized will probably be known as the Consoli-dated Mercur Gold Mines company and will be incorporated under the laws of New Jersey, which are more liberal, the captain says, that a great many other states. Its capitalization will be 1,000,006 shares of a par value of $5.

The captain, in speaking of the new order of things to be inaugurated at Mercur, gave all the credit for it to Hartwig A. Cohen, his general manager, and Duncan McVichie, who has served the Golden Gate as superintendent for several years ent for several years.

The personnel of the new company has not been completed. The captain had the selection of the president, sec-retary and two directors. For his side he has decided upon Mr. Cohen for president and manager and W. H. Cunningham as secretary, but has not decided who the other two directors will

MELCHER ANNUAL MEETING.

Sam McIntyre Now In Control of the Property. The annual meeting of the Melcher

Mining & Milling company was held yesterday afternoon, at which the presdent and manager's report was read, the books and accounts audited and a new board of directors and officers for the ensuing year were chosen. Over 426,000 of the 500,000 shares comprising the capital stock of the cor poration were represented, and of that amount Sam McIntyre voted 250,060 shares. With that showing the other stockholders present asked him who he wanted to run the business for the next year, and after hearing his ticket read they all voted it straight.

Last year, at the organization of the company, Frank M. Langford was made president, secretary and treasurer, but as the control of the proposition now rests with Mr. McIntyre, he nominated and the following board was selected: Samuel McIntyre, preswas selected; Samuel McIntyre, president; William H. GHOSTLY EXPERIENCES.

An Apparition That Appeared to a Woman at New Orleans.

(New York Times.) "It wasn't a ghost, for I saw her as plainly as I ever saw any one in my life," said the little woman, with the soft southern accent, who is making her home now in New York. "And there is no story to tell about it, for it is all absolutely true. It was when I was not much more than a child living in New Orleans at the time of one of the yellow fever epidemics.

"There had come to New Orleans some time before a young English girl, whom we can call Isabel Brown. She was a beautiful girl, with golden hair, big blue eyes, and a fine complexion. She showed in her general appearance that she was a beautiful girl. She showed in her general appearance that she was of a good family, and the woman who was with her, a much more common-looking woman, whom, she called her mother, we always believed to be her nurse. That we never knew, but we met them, and my mother was interested in Irahel and she was free interested in Isabel, and she was frequently invited to our house, and became somewhat intimate with my older

I was always delicate, and at that time I was ill enough to be confined to my room part of the time and receive a good deal of care from my mother. In New Orleans we have what we call galleries, though you would call them balconies here, and there was one them balconies here, and there was one on the side of our house opening into the yard, and the door and window of my room opened onto this gallery. I was in my room and in bed, perfectly was in my room and in bed, perfectly wide awake, when suddenly some one pulled aside the mosquito bar from the bed—we always have testers to the beds and the mosquito bar, or net, as you say, over it—and there I saw Isabel Brown.

Brown.

"I shall never forget how beautiful she looked. She was a beautiful girl anyway, but this time she looked unusually lovely. She was in her white night clothes, her long hair was flying around her, her cheeks were flushed, and she looked like an angel. She called to me three times:

"Lizzie! Lizzie! Lizzie! I want you," and then she was gone.

"I was not at all frightened any more."

"I was not at all frightened any more than I would have been if she had been really there. I had none of the feeling that one would have in seeing a spirit, and she did not have the appearance of and she did not have the appearance of a spirit. But I knew she was not in our house, and I felt that something must be the matter. My mother came to my room a few minutes later and I said to her:

"'Mother Isabel Brown is either dead or dying,' and I told her about it. She wouldn't believe it—she didn't have faith in anything of that kind—she families, and they have a death every time it comes, but we had never had it. "We reached the house, and there was something very quiet about it, as if something might have happened. My mother asked after Isabel, and it was as I felt sure it would be.

"Isabel died last night," her friend said, 'and we have just come from burying her.' People are buried very quickly when they die of the fever, 'Have you a daughter named Lizzie?' she continued to my mother. 'She was calling for her last night.'

Members of the stock exchange might just as well taken a holiday yesterday and saved the exertion of going to the usual board call. There wasn't any business to amount to anything. With a single exception of 100 shares of Mammoth selling at $2.10 the balance of the trading was confined to lower class stocks, but the entire amount of trading done amounted to 18,600 shares, which brought $1,082.50.

Daisy sold at 2 cents at the start, but in another minute 500 shares were bought at 134 cents. Northern Light found a few buyers around 5 cents a share and Ben Butler brought 114 cents.

The closing quotations were:

"It was just a little before 8, just before she died. She jumped out of the room and called "Lizzie! Lizzie! I want you." She looked like an angel, in her white night dress, with her long hair hanging around her, her big blue eyes and flushed cheeks, and she was so anxious to go to Lizzie that in the delirium of the fever it took several of us to get her back to bed. As soon as we did, the last symptoms of the disease set in and she died immediately." "Yes," said my mother, 'and my daughter saw her just as you have described her, and told me about it.' The Big Ditch Irrigation company and Thomas Broden have begun suit against Robert Trott and twenty-six others and want an injunction to keep them from taking water from the Big Cottonwood creek. In the complaint, which is drawn, by Attorneys J. H. Moyle and D. H. Wells, it is alleged that the plaintiffs appropriated the water of Big Cottonwood creek forty years ago and have used it ever since, and now they claim it as their own through the big ditch and the lower canal. The defendants have, it is maintained in the complaint, diverted about one-third of this water which does not belong to them. The plaintiffs ask that the defendants be enjoined from using the water and that their title to it be quieted.
